The POWER OF GREAT PARTNERSHIPS

WELCOME

DEAR ALUMNI, PARENTS, AND FRIENDS,

Welcome to the Winter issue of Loyola magazine. In this issue, we celebrate milestones. Read about Loyola's first capital campaign in almost 20 years, Partner: The Campaign for the Future of Loyola. Our cover story profiles just a few of the partnerships that enable us to educate our students.

Al Gini, SBA professor and author, has contributed a piece about the significance of the upcoming bicentennial of Abraham Lincoln's birth. Test your Loyola knowledge with our history quiz, take an in-depth look at one of LUMA's most fascinating works of art, and read the story of a war veteran's return to Vietnam.

Big things are happening at Loyola University Chicago. From the University's largest-ever capital campaign to construction projects on campus to breakthroughs in research and education, there is a real sense of excitement and change. We hope you will use Loyola magazine as a way to stay connected to your alma mater, and we encourage you to go online for more information, get involved in events on campus, or just get in touch with a fellow alum or favorite professor. The capital campaign is about raising funds, but, more importantly, it is about creating and strengthening the connections among us. Loyola is not a collection of classrooms and laboratories—it is a community of people making a difference. Please visit LUC.edu/partner to learn more. We are proud to count you all as partners in Loyola's future.

Thank you for reading.

Sincerely,

Loyola launches historic

Read more about Partner: The Campaign for the Future of Loyola on page 34.

On a warm fall evening in September, Loyola launched its most ambitious fundraising campaign since its founding over 130 years ago. "We've accomplished so much already," Michael J. Garanzini, S.J., president of Loyola University Chicago, told the audience of Loyola's most ardent supporters. "But we aren't ready to rest. Quite to the contrary, we're just getting started. And, in the great Chicago tradition, we have big plans."

With that, Father Garanzini, along with Dr. Paul Whelton, president and CEO of Loyola University Health System, launched

campaign

Partner: The Campaign for the Future of Loyola. The goal of the campaign, announced by Father Garanzini, is the ambitious but attainable target of half a billion dollars. Even more exciting, we are already more than halfway toward this goal, having raised over $278 million at the time of publication.

This campaign will usher in a new age of education and health care at Loyola. It will raise funds and spark enthusiasm for all that we can accomplish in the 21st century. Visit LUC.edu/partner to learn more and to find out how you can help.

In with the new: Loyola's construction plans

These days, the dust never settles at Loyola. All of our campuses are undergoing major transformations. Here is a roundup of some of our construction projects and plans:

LAKE SHORE CAMPUS

- Demolition of Damen Hall
- New building in the style of Dumbach Hall on the former Damen Hall site
- More green space
- New Varsity Athletic Annex addition to Gentile Center

MEDICAL CENTER CAMPUS

- New School of Nursing building
- New research facility

WATER TOWER CAMPUS

- New home for the business school on the northeast corner of State and Pearson
- Modernization and expansion of Loyola Law Center at 25 E. Pearson

JOHN FELICE ROME CENTER

- New facility closer to the historic city center

Celebrating 100 years of the School of Law

In 2009, Loyola's School of Law will celebrate its centennial. Planned special events include faculty investitures into newly endowed professorships, a new service project event for alumni and students, additional young alumni events, and a group bar admission to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Law alumni are also invited to join students and faculty for a learning experience on one of the law school's international trips to London, Beijing, and Rome.

The premier event of the year will be a Law Centennial Gala for alumni and friends, held at the Chicago Field Museum on

Ignatius House: a new home for the Jesuits

As part of the new Lake Shore Campus configuration, the old Jesuit residence was taken down this summer, and a new Jesuit residence, Ignatius House, has been constructed as part of a renovation and addition to the Kraft mansion on North Kenmore.

The old Jes Res was built in 1922 by architect Paul V. Hyland. Although the old residence served its purpose well for many years, it was time for a newer, more up-to-date building.

The new Ignatius House is home to about 20 Jesuits (including Father Garanzini). It was built by Illinois-based Temple Architects, LLC, with lead architect Edward G. Sotiroff. According to Justin Daffron, S.J., who is overseeing the completion of the project and move-in, Ignatius House was designed to be welcoming and to foster a sense of community. "We're most excited to be in the heart of where most of the student life is, on the south side of campus," says Daffron. The Ignatius House chapel seats about 80, and there is a daily weekday Mass at 7:30 a.m. that is open to the Loyola community.

Biodiesel program is really cooking

When Zach Waickman enrolled last year as one of the first students in Loyola's new Solutions to Environmental Problems (STEP): Biodiesel course, the program was little more than an idea, and its makeshift laboratory in Damen Hall was sparsely equipped.

But soon, Waickman and fellow students were busy converting used cooking oil from University cafeterias into clean-burning fuel using a process that caused the aroma of french fries to waft through the nearby corridors of Damen Hall. Throughout the year, STEP students studied the social, political, and environmental implications of biodiesel fuel as a possible solution to the energy crisis.

Now, one year and 300 gallons of clean-burning biodiesel later, the program has been successful enough to move its laboratory into a facilities garage on Broadway Avenue, with new features that improve safety and ease of operation. Waickman, who graduated last spring, has been named assistant biodiesel manager for the laboratory. This semester, the lab is expected to match last year's production and allow for more advanced student-driven projects. The STEP program plans to refocus and examine sustainable food systems in the spring semester, while still maintaining the biodiesel lab. Learn more at LUC.edu/biodiesel.

Professor Garanzini

Loyola President Michael Garanzini, S.J., is our fearless leader and highest-level administrator. But that's not all: he's also a teacher.

This semester, Father Garanzini is teaching two classes: one, a doctoral seminar in the psychology department, focuses on systems theory and analyzes sessions conducted by some of the great therapists. "I'm recalling how much fun being a therapist can be. I hope the 10 doctoral students are enjoying it as much as I am," says Father Garanzini, who has a BA and a PhD in psychology. Prior to becoming president of Loyola, Father Garanzini was a professor of psychology at Georgetown.

Father Garanzini is also teaching a first-year seminar to 20 lucky freshmen. "We're reading several books: one on moral leadership, one on the environmental crisis, and one on art and architecture, exploring the three important questions every educated person asks: What is the nature of the good? What is truth? And what do we mean by beauty?" says Father Garanzini. "And the students are teaching me what it's like to be a Loyola student."

This is just another indication of what sets Loyola apart. It isn't at every university that you'd find the president in both the boardroom and the classroom.

Law school expands in 25 EP

The renovation and expansion of the Loyola Law Center at 25 E. Pearson Street has begun. Construction on the first phase of the project, which includes floors 10 and 11, began last summer. By January, these floors will house a new 175-seat ceremonial courtroom, six state-of-the-art classrooms, legal clinics, the Center for Advocacy, and the Civitas ChildLaw Center.

Following the completion of phase one, the School of Law will exclusively occupy nine floors of the building, which will include 19 modern classrooms with advanced audio/visual and computer capabilities; additional office space for students, faculty, and staff; and several attractive study areas to accommodate student needs. The entire law renovation project is scheduled to be completed by 2010.

RAMBLERS JOIN THE RACE FOR THE CURE

On September 27, the Loyola softball team took time out from its fall season to help raise money and awareness for breast cancer research by taking part in the Susan G. Komen Run for the Cure in Chicago. The Ramblers ran as a team for the fifth straight year and, once again, raised over $1,000.

Coming soon to LUMA

This winter, step out of the cold and into the Loyola University Museum of Art. From photography to sculpture, from the Stone Age to the Digital Age, the upcoming special exhibitions offer something for everyone.

COURTESY OF PARTNERS IN HEALTH

On the Same Map:
Hope is a Human Right

November 29, 2008–January 4, 2009

From the barren hills of Haiti to the shantytowns of Peru; from the villages of rural Rwanda to the streets of downtown Boston, the photographs that make up this exhibit illuminate how communities that suffer the most glaring health, social, and economic disparities can be revived by access to support and training. On the Same Map is a photography exhibition depicting the clinics and communities where Partners In Health has worked with patients and local health workers to combat AIDS, tuberculosis, hunger, poverty, and injustice over the past 20 years. Partners In Health is a non-profit corporation active in the Caribbean, Latin America, Africa, Russia, and the United States.

Through digital photographic manipulation, Nancy Gershman creates a custom, wishful reality. Her dreamscapes are surrealistic and often ironic photomontages that repurpose personal photographs to create new meaning and evoke new emotion.

PATRICIA ERENS KEY COLLECTION

Locking It Away: The Signs, Symbols and Secrets of Keys

January 31–March 8, 2009

LUMA presents a recent acquisition of keys and locks from Medieval times through the 19th century from the collection of Patricia Erens. A lecture series on the obsession of collecting keys and psychoanalytic interpretation of keys as symbols will be a companion to the exhibition.

GIFT OF AARON BERK

Neolithic Idols

January 31–March 8, 2009

The exhibition features 100 examples of tiny stone sculptures called Stargazers, dating back to 3000 BCE. These objects are thought to have been used in religious ceremonies in Turkey during the late Stone Age. The collection is a recent gift of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Berk.

The Eternal Light of Egypt: The Photography of Sarite Sanders

January 31–May 10, 2009

Contemporary photographer Sarite Sanders has produced a remarkable collection of photographs that capture the mysterious radiance and residual spirituality of Egypt's ancient ruins. These beautiful black-and-white photographs recall early 19th-century travel photography that inconically captured the awe and majesty of Pharaonic Egypt for Western viewers.

First National Meeting of Women of Color Writing Drama

The Department of Fine and Performing Arts took part in a historic event when it co-hosted the First National Meeting of Women of Color Writing Drama in partnership with the Black Women Playwrights' Group in September.

The event invited all women of color who write drama to come together to share their work and artistic visions. Jonathan Wilson, Loyola's faculty member of the year and a well-known director across the nation, directed a staged reading. The conference drew literary luminaries including Lynn Nottage, winner of the MacArthur Genius Award in playwriting, who spoke at the event. Other prominent playwrights who read from their work were Carla Ching, Nambi E. Kelley, and Tanya Saracho.

Decoding a work of art

by JONATHAN CANNING
MARTIN D'ARCY CURATOR OF ART
AT THE LOYOLA UNIVERSITY MUSEUM OF ART

Works of art frequently display the evidence of their histories. If the evidence can be properly deciphered, it either corroborates or contradicts the written and oral stories that accompany a great work of art.

The Collector's Chest at the Loyola University Museum of Art is a case-in-point. It is unique among American collections as the only such chest by the famous 16th-century Mannerist goldsmith Wenzel Jamnitzer of Nuremberg. The story goes that the chest was owned by Queen Christina of Sweden and was taken by her to Rome when she abdicated her throne and converted to Catholicism. After her death, the chest presumably was sold to pay off her many debts. In 1774 the piece was acquired in Rome by John Thorpe, S.J., the agent of the English Lord Arundell. In 1793, it was donated to Stonyhurst College, a Jesuit boarding school in northwestern England, where it was long known as the "Jewel Casket of Queen Christina." The chest remained there for almost 200 years until its acquisition by Donald Rowe, S.J., for the D'Arcy collection.

18TH-CENTURY ROMAN MODIFICATIONS:

How much of this story does the Collector's Chest itself corroborate? The piece can certainly confirm its date and authorship. Stylistically, Mannerist art of the late 16th century valued luxury, complexity, and ingenuity. These elements are indicated along the right side of the main photo.

Sadly, there is no physical evidence to prove that the chest was ever owned by Queen Christina of Sweden. There is, however, at least proof that it was in Rome at the end of the 18th century, in the form of modifications made to

16TH-CENTURY MANNERIST ELEMENTS:

● Secret compartments, like the one revealed by a small latch in the roof of the chest and the three hidden drawers in the base

● Elaborately detailed decoration, including the use of male (terms) and female (caryatids) figures as architectural elements

● It's hard to make out, but a W and a lion's head on the column upon which Mars sits indicate Wenzel Jamnitzer's authorship. An N to the left signifies that the piece was made in Nuremberg.

● Complex strapwork decorations

● Imagery based upon Classical mythology: there are 12 gods and goddesses cast in gold, set against a background of lapis lazuli, an expensive blue mineral.

THE COLLECTOR'S CHEST

the piece. This evidence: simple Classical urns with crisp profiles in contrast to the scale and elaboration of the Mannerist decorations, and four sphinxes with headdresses that reflect the increased European knowledge of and interest in Egyptian art in the 18th century. These elements are indicated along the bottom of the main photo.

In conclusion, I suspect that Queen Christina's name was attached to the chest when its Roman owner sought to sell it to a wealthy English lord. The piece was evidently smartened up with some 18th-century additions. British nobility was notorious for snapping up art across Europe, either while on the Grand Tour, a multi-year trip across the continent, or through art agents, like Father Thorpe.

Ownership by the famous Swedish queen would have offered a plausible explanation as to the Mannerist chest's presence in Rome, and it would have enhanced both its appeal and its price. Regardless, the Collector's Chest is one of the most extraordinary pieces in the D'Arcy collection. But don't take my word for it—come and study it yourself at LUMA.

The POWER OF GREAT PARTNERSHIPS

IT IS A WELL-DOCUMENTED FACT that the cost of a liberal arts education is increasingly—often prohibitively—high. At Loyola, we believe that students of all backgrounds should have access to the education they deserve. That’s why student scholarships are the single most important funding need of our capital campaign.

Our campaign theme, “Partner,” expresses our belief that a great education and a strong community rely on the combined efforts of individuals and organizations. The partnership between a student in need and a benefactor is one that can change the lives of both, as well as the many people that student will serve after graduation.

The people and circumstances profiled in the following pages are representative of the thousands of partnerships between students and donors that exist at Loyola. For some students, the generosity of a donor opens doors to invaluable academic experiences. For others, it lessens the burden of debt they will carry after graduation. And there are those who simply could not attend without scholarship assistance.

An enriching education is expensive, but it is well worth the investment. By working together, we can give all deserving students access to that education.

The story of how Josephine Riccardi and Deresha Gibson (MSW’08) came to be partners is, at its root, a story about parents and children and the desire to help strangers. Through Riccardi’s generosity, Gibson became the first recipient of the Sempre Avanti Endowed Scholarship, which supports students pursuing their master’s in social work. The name, Sempre Avanti, meaning “always onward” in Italian, stemmed from Riccardi’s late uncle, who said and wrote it often.

Riccardi’s daughter, Nina, works for Loyola’s School of Social Work. “I have to admit that Nina was my catalyst,” says Mrs. Riccardi. “When she became a social worker, I didn’t know what that was. I wanted to learn more about her work.”

Nina told her mother about the field of social work and the different ways social workers labor to better the community. She also told her about the applicants who wanted to come to Loyola, but couldn’t afford it.

“I became excited by the chance to help,” says Riccardi, “because what they do is so important. I thought, ‘I can’t do what they do, but I can contribute.’” She decided to endow a scholarship as a way to let her resources help the most people. “It’s a chain, if I can help them to help others,” says Riccardi. “And to know that I contribute to these lovely students brings me such joy that I get teary-eyed. I am so proud of them.”

Deresha Gibson, the first Sempre Avanti recipient, had a lot of obstacles standing in the way of her social work degree. But those challenges were also what inspired her to pursue the degree and what drove her to finish. Gibson, a single mother of two special-needs children, aged 9 and 5, could not afford a master's degree on her own. "I went into social work because of my two children," says

Gibson. "They each have health disabilities that demand time, patience, and compassion. I've become a nurse, a therapist, and an advocate for my boys. I knew there were many other people who needed advocates as well."

For Gibson, Riccardi's contribution meant the opportunity to follow her calling. "The scholarship has meant a lot to me, because I would have had to take out a lot of loans. I'm not in a lot of debt now—just a little," she jokes. Gibson, who interned through Loyola at a federal defender program, is now interested in criminal justice policy and criminal advocacy, particularly in the effects that incarceration has on families. Nina Riccardi feels that the passion of the Sempre Avanti recipients justifies her mother's generosity.

"If you're investing in a student, you're investing in her ability to give service to others." By helping to provide these women with an education, Mrs. Riccardi has become a partner in the important work they have done, and will continue to do, on behalf of those who are underrepresented and ignored.

WHAT IT MEANS: “I want to thank Mrs. Schumann for keeping Loyola in her heart.”

Krista Shapiro (advertising and PR '09), Dolores Schumann, and Natalie Bachtell (HR and marketing '09) at the annual Bob Schumann Memorial Golf Outing

Honored by friends and family, the spirit of Robert G. Schumann (BA '81), who passed away in 2000, lives on through the students at Loyola. “Bob knew the value of education,” says his mother, Dolores Schumann. “He also knew of the economic difficulties in paying for college.”

After he passed away, Bob’s friends approached Mrs. Schumann with a plan. “The idea for the scholarship came from Bob’s fraternity brothers, Ed Perez and Wayne Skwarek,” says Schumann. “When they told me about it, I immediately became involved.” Mrs. Schumann generously established the Robert G. Schumann Scholarship Fund for Excellence in Business Education in 2003. Each fall, the Bob Schumann Memorial Golf Outing is held to raise funds for the scholarship and to remember Bob.

“Through this scholarship, Bob can be seen as an inspiration to those who receive this gift and to the lives they in turn will touch,” says Perez (BA '83), a classmate of Bob’s. “He was a man of faith and action who believed in hard work, generosity of spirit, and devotion to family and friends.”

Krista Shapiro, a senior advertising and public relations major at Loyola, and recipient of the scholarship, is grateful, “It helped to lessen the financial burden,” she says. “I can’t thank Mrs. Schumann enough. It was such an honor to receive this scholarship.”

While at Loyola, Bob was instrumental in resurrecting the Delta Sigma Pi business fraternity. After graduation, he began his professional career in sales and later co-founded a company. Bob’s time at Loyola, however, remained with him: “His time there was one of the best parts of his life,” says Mrs. Schumann.

“I want to thank Mrs. Schumann for keeping Loyola in her heart after her son passed away,” says Natalie Bachtell, a senior human resources and marketing major, who also received the scholarship for this year. “The scholarship definitely helped me with college expenses.” Like Bob Schumann, Bachtell wants to stay connected with Loyola after graduation and pass her education on to the next generation of students—she ultimately hopes to return and teach in the business school.

JAIME MACIAS

LOYOLA CONNECTION: Junior business and marketing major

GOAL: To be able to remain at Loyola, graduate, and pursue a career in marketing

WHAT IT MEANS: “If it weren’t for the Croghans, I wouldn’t be here. They gave me this opportunity.”

Jaime Macias, a junior business and marketing major, has worked hard to get to where he is. A graduate of Cristo Rey, a Jesuit high school in the Pilsen neighborhood, Macias is both a full-time student and a full-time employee at an advertising firm. “If I don’t work, I can’t come to school and pay expenses and help support my mom and my sister,” says Macias. He’s carefully arranged his schedule to juggle both work and classes. Even so, when Macias got his tuition bill last year, it looked as though he wouldn’t be able to continue on at Loyola. But thanks to support from the John W. and Rosemary Croghan Scholarship Fund, Macias is now enjoying his third successful year as a Rambler.

The Croghans are intimately connected to both Loyola and Cristo Rey. Mr. Croghan (BA ’52) is a Loyola alum and the chair of an investment management firm in Chicago. Mrs. Croghan is on the boards of trustees of both LUC and Loyola Academy, and is also a founding chair on the board of trustees at Cristo Rey. Cristo Rey Jesuit High School opened 12 years ago in an economically disadvantaged, predominately Hispanic neighborhood. Students at the innovative school participate in a work-study program to offset tuition costs. There are now 23 Cristo Rey schools nationwide, modeled on the original one in Chicago. The Croghan scholarship fund supports graduates of the Cristo Rey network at Loyola, as both organizations are dear to the Croghans. “When we were considering making a gift, it was important to us to support these students,” says Mrs. Croghan. “Many of them just can’t afford college. Sometimes they get financial aid and go for a year, and if they don’t continue to get that aid, they drop out. We want to help them survive and graduate.”

Macias is grateful. “All I can say is, ‘thank you,’” he says. “If it weren’t for the Croghans, I wouldn’t be here. They gave me this opportunity.” And he’s making the most of it: “I’m enjoying my classes,” says Macias, “especially the marketing ones, because I can use the concepts in my job.” Macias hopes to eventually pursue a career in marketing, which both his job and his education will help him to do. “A college degree is increasingly becoming a necessity,” says Mr. Croghan. “For certain opportunities in this country, you just need it. And the cost is going up.” Through their scholarship fund, the Croghans are doing their best to help.

“The students at these schools need this sort of partnering,” says Mrs. Croghan. For one of these students, at least, the generosity of a stranger has promised a brighter future.

LINCOLN, LEADER

February 12, 2009, marks the bicentennial anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln.

FRSHIP, & LOYOLA

The past 20 years have seen an explosion of research and best-selling books dealing with every possible facet of Lincoln as a person, a politician, and as a much-put-upon president. Aside from our home in the proud “Land of Lincoln,” the Loyola community believes that there is a direct correlation between Lincoln’s legacy and Loyola’s commitments to education, ethics, and leadership—learn broadly, serve generously, lead courageously. In celebrating Lincoln, we believe we are celebrating both our past and our future as a people, as a state, and as a University. In honor of this bicentennial, Loyola’s own Al Gini, professor of business ethics and accomplished author, offers his thoughts on this American icon and the man behind the legend.

BY AL GINI

As historian Robert W. Johannsen has suggested, anyone who embarks on a study of Abraham Lincoln must first come to terms with, and somehow get beyond, the Lincoln myth. This is easier said than done. More words have been written about Lincoln than any other American political figure. Over 14,500 books have been written about every aspect of Lincoln’s public and personal life, including a less than fascinating study entitled Lincoln Never Smoked a Cigarette, and over 55,000 books have been written on the general topic of the Civil War. According to journalist and Lincoln aficionado Andrew Ferguson, there are probably more statues, banks, bridges, schools, roads, and highways named after Lincoln than any other single president. As a society, says Ferguson, we have not just memorialized Lincoln in concrete and the written word. A group called the “Abes,” or ALP (Abraham Lincoln Presenters), keep his mission and message alive and on stage by “personifying” and “portraying” Lincoln (top hat, black suit, and beard are standard) at various school, community, and social events. Their average fee is about $200.

Lincoln’s life reads like a Hollywood script, from his humble origins to his unexpected presidency to his unorthodox decisions as Commander-in-Chief, to his theatrical martyrdom. “Honest Abe” has become our secular saint. Lincoln began his life in a log cabin and ended it in the White House, and, in between, he saved the Union, freed the slaves, and reformulated America’s commitment to freedom and democracy. As William Lee Miller points out, except for a handful of religious figures, Lincoln has few superiors on the short list for most admired and most loved of humankind.

Because of everything that has been written about Lincoln, because The Atlantic named him “the single most influential American of all time,” because of all the films that have been made (I lost count at 23), because his face is printed on the five-dollar bill and stamped on our pennies, because his image is exploited in commercials, because he is so much a part of our collective national consciousness—there really is no way to ever have a totally objective portrait of Lincoln as a person, as a politician, or as a president.

LINCOLN ON CAMPUS

In 2009, Loyola will be offering a number of classes, events, and presentations on Abraham Lincoln. A highlight of our efforts will be a lecture on "Lincoln and Leadership" by award-winning and best-selling author Doris Kearns Goodwin (Team of Rivals). Goodwin will speak on the night before Lincoln's 200th birthday, Wednesday, February 11, in Madonna della Strada Chapel. We expect this event to be popular, so tickets will be available online in December at LUC.edu/lincoln. Admission is free. Please contact Special Events at 312.915.7662 with questions.

And yet, although the real Lincoln could not have been as perfect as some interpreters would have us believe, I believe that he was a person of special character and principle who nevertheless possessed the flaws that burden even the best of us. To begin with, Lincoln really was born on a farm in a log cabin, but he hated farming. He did "split rails," but only when he had to, and never as many or as proficiently as legend claims. He was "notably unhandsome." He was tall, thin, leggy, awkward, and a careless dresser whose trousers ended mid-ankle. Edwin Stanton, later his Secretary of War, once referred to him as a "long-armed gorilla." By his own admission, Lincoln attended school for less than a year. He was a bad businessperson. He lost money in a number of ventures and only began to make a decent wage as a lawyer after he married his wife. He was absent-minded. He may have been Honest Abe, but on more than one occasion he forgot to pay his bills and keep his appointments. He was melancholic, moody, and morose. Sometimes his fits of despair lasted for months and required the intervention of friends. He too often got lost in his own head. Sometimes, even before the loss of his children and the crushing cruelties of the war, he said that the sadness of life would overwhelm him and render him incapable of deliberate action.

Lincoln was neither a saint nor a savior. Nor did he single-handedly do all the things he is credited with doing. In the end, his great leadership is a combination of many factors: talent, timing, and character. None of us has any control over all of these factors. Lincoln's greatness stems from his single-minded efforts to influence what he could: his character and his powers of reason.

Thomas Lincoln said his son was lazy, and, in some ways, he was right. Young Abe didn't want to be a laborer—he wanted a life of ideas and issues. He spent his life preparing himself not for the presidency, but for a life of reasoning and debate. He was not a child of precocious genius, but he loved the power of the written word and read every book he could borrow, barter for, or buy. The stories of him reading while plowing, between serving customers at his general store, or while walking or riding are not exaggerations. Books, the great ideas of the ages, newspapers, and the burning issues of his era were his constant companions. As one pundit put it: "Happily, Lincoln's intellectual skills were in inverse relation to his homeliness!"

Lincoln believed it is our duty to have rational arguments for our political actions. For Lincoln, politics should be, first and last, an exercise in reason. He wanted the best minds to help him in his presidency. According to biographer Doris Kearns Goodwin, Lincoln sought out "the best and the brightest," regardless of their political affiliation—even if they had been his opponents in seeking the presidency. Although he always made the final call, says Goodwin, Lincoln needed his "team of rivals" to expose him to all arguments and all sides of an issue. It was Lincoln's commitment to learning broadly that enabled him to save the Union he so dearly loved.

Lincoln's 200th birthday offers us, as a nation and as a university, an opportunity to review and reflect on Lincoln's leadership and legacy. Lincoln may not have been a saint, but he was a man of character, principle, and ethics. As Aristotle said, ethics cannot be learned by simply reading a treatise on virtue, but are best grasped by witnessing or studying the conduct of an ethical individual. In this case, our very own Abraham Lincoln.

Pushball

What pushball lacks in complexity, it makes up in spectacle. The concept behind the game, as the name implies, is that two teams oppose each other on a field, and push a six-foot ball toward a goal. A team receives five points for pushing the ball under the seven-foot goal, or eight points for throwing it over. Time to resurrect the game, don't you think?

Charles Comiskey

Comiskey, the legendary baseball player, manager, and owner of the White Sox, attended St. Ignatius College from 1870 to 1874. He was instrumental in forming the American League, owned the Sox from 1900 to 1931, and built the original Comiskey Park. He was implicated as part of the 1919 "Black Sox" scandal, in which the Sox threw the World Series, and for which Shoeless Joe Jackson was banned from the game. Comiskey was nevertheless inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1939. In 2003, U.S. Cellular bought the naming rights to Comiskey Park, although most Chicagoans agree that U.S. Cellular Field just doesn't have the same, well, ring to it.

The 26th Amendment

The Emergency Conference for New Voters was held at the Lake Shore Campus in response to the recently ratified 26th Amendment to the Constitution, which lowered the voting age from 21 to 18. According to the December 3, 1971, issue of the Phoenix, "This conference will mark the founding of a National Young People's Political Caucus. The Caucus will seek to organize the election of delegates to the national nominating conventions who will be independently committed to an end to the war and a new beginning towards social justice in America." Over 1,000 delegates from colleges and universities around the United States attended. Bella Abzug and Coretta Scott King were among the speakers.

4. A B C D
Carter H. Harrison Jr.

Harrison, a St. Ignatius graduate of 1881, was the 30th mayor of Chicago, but the first to have been born in the city. Following in the footsteps of his father and namesake, Harrison was elected mayor in 1897, and St. Ignatius sent a congratulatory floral arrangement in the shape of the school's crest. In 1900, the college awarded him a doctor of law degree. Harrison went on to serve five terms as mayor, from 1897–1905 and 1911–1915. He was related to President William Henry Harrison on his father's side, and even had hopes of winning the Democratic nomination himself in 1904. The nomination instead went to Alton B. Parker, whom the Republican candidate, Theodore Roosevelt, handily defeated.

5. A B C D
Richard J. Daley

The Sword of Loyola is presented at the Stritch Annual Award Dinner for humanitarian work in a vocation other than medicine. Iconic Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley never received the award. Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, a race car driver, World War I fighter ace, Medal of Honor recipient, and general connoisseur of near-death experiences, was awarded the Sword of Loyola in 1968. In 1996, the Sword of Loyola was conferred upon Helen Prejean, CSJ, the noted advocate for those on death row, whose autobiographical account, Dead Man Walking, was made into a movie (starring Susan Sarandon) and, later, an opera. Jim Henson, the puppeteer behind The Muppet Show and Sesame Street, was honored with the Sword of Loyola in 1982. This year's recipient is Nancy Knowles, co-chair of the Captial Campaign Leadership Committee (see page 35).

6. A B C D
Good question

It's a bit of a mystery. The February 13, 1987, issue of the Phoenix states that land under Cudahy Science is sand-filled and not stable enough for astronomical work. It also says that an unnamed astronomer told the Jesuits that the entire building was inadequate. Of course, the same article suggests that that was just the reason given because they actually ran out of money. Although Born in Chicago indicates that the architectural firm that built Cudahy Science in 1910 "also acted as contractor, making sure that the building's foundations would be free from vibrations," it is perhaps telling that Loyola instead installed a seismograph in the basement, which in 1912 registered the first recorded earthquake in Chicago history.

They're polling machines!

Loyola students encourage their peers to get involved in the voting process.

Loyola students get involved on Election Day

An innovative program and a government grant got Loyola students to the polls in November, and not just to vote. Earlier this year, Loyola's Division of Public Affairs worked with Cook County Clerk David Orr's office to figure out how to get students involved in the election process. Public Affairs placed ads in the Phoenix and held a contest to determine which student organization could recruit the most students willing to serve as equipment managers for the primary election in February. As the name implies, equipment managers are responsible for making sure everything goes smoothly with voting equipment and transmitting results on Election Day, which requires a day of training. Public Affairs hoped for a total of 35 students. They got 150. On February 5, a particularly wintry day, all 150 students reported to polling locations throughout Cook County to make sure the voting process went according to plan.

After that success, Loyola submitted a grant proposal to the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) describing the student involvement in the recent election and committing to secure more than 300 student poll workers for the November 4 presidential election. The grant proposal, written primarily by Loyola senior Jennifer De Neal, a political science major who works for Public Affairs, focused on the need for students to become involved in the electoral process. "It was a collaboration around the office," says De Neal. "It seems like I wrote 500 drafts."

The grant was successful. EAC awarded Loyola $30,000. "We wrote about how creative the student organizations had been in recruiting," says De Neal. "Lambda Theta Alpha, a Latina sorority, recruited 82 students. Nursing students put an ad on Facebook Marketplace, which is how my own roommate found out about it. I think it was that creativity that won us the grant." Because of the grant money, and a joint effort from Loyola and the Cook County Clerk's office, about 300 students served as poll workers on the November Election Day. "The collaboration was a beautiful thing," says De Neal.

In fact, Clerk Orr received The Election Center's Democracy Award, the highest honor conferred by the Election Center National Association of Election Officials. The award recognized Orr's partnership with Loyola as the most unique and innovative program implemented by an elected official in 2007. "These students are invaluable because they are great with the new technology, are able to help our veteran election judges, and, most importantly, they provide the foundation for a new generation of poll workers in Cook County," says Orr.

The hope is that this opportunity to see how the electoral process works will keep students engaged in the future, and not just in high-profile elections. "It was so interesting to see how voting works," says De Neal. "Voting is essential. It's the foundation of the government. Even city, county, and municipal elections—it's a small group of people electing those officials."

Coming home to The Clare

Shirley Simeon (PhB '46), PhD, is returning to campus to live at The Clare.

THE CLARE AT WATER TOWER is almost complete and is slated to welcome new residents by the end of this year. As Loyola alumna Shirley Simeon (PhB '46), PhD, readies to move into The Clare, a senior living community, she reflects on the events that have led her back to her alma mater.

As the first black woman to graduate from Loyola University Chicago, in the class of 1946, Simeon will come full circle when she moves to The Clare, located in the heart of the Water Tower Campus. The Clare, sponsored by the Franciscan Sisters of Chicago, is a 53-story development with 258 independent living apartments and is built on land leased from Loyola. The first three floors of The Clare will house Loyola's new School of Communication.

"I have fond memories of my time at Loyola, and can recall what it all looked like when I went to school there," says Simeon. For her, moving into The Clare is a logical next step, and a fitting way to start a new phase in her life, which she describes as full of ups and downs. "I've accomplished many things in my 85 years—this move will be one of the 'ups,'" says Simeon. "I very much look forward to moving to The Clare, and continuing my life's journey."

Simeon was the first person in her family to graduate from college, and she later earned a master's degree in sociology and a doctorate in psychology. Her career and travels took her to Brooklyn to study the library system, to San Francisco during the feminist movement, and back to Chicago, where she worked for Mayor Richard M. Daley and then opened a private counseling practice.

To celebrate her 70th birthday, Simeon crossed the Atlantic on the Queen Elizabeth 2 to spend time in London and Paris, returning to the States on the infamous and now-defunct Concord. "I'm at the point in my life where I am looking forward to meeting new friends at The Clare and enjoying the vibrant and carefree environment it has to offer," says Simeon. "Moving to The Clare is a new beginning, yet it feels very much like I'm coming back home."

ABOUT THE CLARE

Built on land leased to the Franciscan Sisters from Loyola, The Clare will offer residents maintenance-free independent living; estate protection; a variety of services and amenities; and access to assisted living, skilled nursing, and memory support. Residents will be a part of the Loyola community and will enjoy access to Loyola classes, libraries, and special events. The Clare offers a variety of financial options, including a Gift of Care program.

Loyola vet returns to Vietnam

While on an immersion trip sponsored by Loyola, half a world away, in a country where he'd fought 40 years ago, all anyone wanted to do with Jerome Lucas was talk to him. "One morning I got up and I walked about two miles. I had no less than 10 people ask me to stop and have a cup of coffee. One family wanted me to eat with them," says Lucas, an animal care specialist at Loyola. "I've never seen anything like it."

Born in Washington, D.C., Lucas worked as a physical education instructor until he was drafted in 1965. He served in the Army and fought in Vietnam from 1966 to '67. Working as a reconnaissance medic, he was stationed in the town of Plây Ku, in the central highlands of Vietnam. Jerome saw action on several occasions, and witnessed the brutality of war firsthand at the hospital. Once, a soldier stepped on a landmine within feet of Lucas. He saw a group of Green Berets suffer 70 percent casualties. "I don't know if it was all my mother's prayers, or just luck, but I got out of there without getting hurt," he says.

In May of 1967, Lucas flew home and moved to Chicago. He worked at the University of Illinois-Chicago, and now he works in the labs in the Quinlan Life Sciences Center at Loyola. He heard about immersion trips offered for staff and students, but doubted that he'd ever go. "I never thought I would be selected," he says. "When I got the notice that I had been selected for the Vietnam trip, I was overwhelmed."

On June 2, Lucas left with the Loyola group to Vietnam on an immersion trip designed as an opportunity for faculty and staff development and to witness the work of Jesuits abroad. While the group toured Hue, the ancient capital of Vietnam, Lucas met some men he would never forget, "This lady asked me if I was an American GI. After I said, 'yes,' she introduced me to these men who were North Vietnamese soldiers. Turns out, we had served in the same place, An Khe, at the same time. It was gut-wrenching for me. There was a possibility that I had aimed my rifle at these guys," he says

On many levels, the trip was deeply moving for Lucas. "I apologized to everyone I ran into for the aggression that I showed their country back in '66, but everyone said, 'ah, forget it.' Every time I saw a church in any village I would go inside and pray, pray for all the people I ever met in my life.

"It was just so beautiful," he says with a smile. "Such an excellent experience."

The summer China program is housed at The Beijing Center, of which Loyola is the U.S. host university, on the campus of the Beijing University of International Business and Economics.

In addition to classroom study, students are exposed to guest lectures on Chinese history and culture, participate in guided excursions to sites in Beijing and the surrounding region, and have access to a professional guide and interpreter throughout the three-week program.

SSW goes global

THE SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK (SSW) has planned a week-long seminar at the John Felice Rome Center for faculty and students from Loyola and six Italian universities. Organized through the SSW's new Institute for Migration and Global Studies and Practice, the course will compare American and Italian migration policies and practices.

The SSW is also planning an immersion trip to Beijing in May.

Along with the Institute for Migration and Global Studies and Practice, the SSW has also recently launched the Institute of Intergenerational Studies and Practice and the Institute for Advanced Innovations in Social Work Practice and Research.

Loyola's first soccer All-American

In Michael Ferguson's home in Overland Park, Kansas, two photographs sit side-by-side in a single frame. One is a recent picture showing Ferguson sprinting across a soccer field.

The second photo shows a similar-looking young man in an almost identical pose—Ferguson's grandfather, George. This image was captured in the 1950s, when George Ferguson, now 76, was a member of the national soccer team in the former British Guiana, a South American nation now known as Guyana.

Michael Ferguson, a junior forward on Loyola's men's soccer team, believes he inherited some of his grandfather's athletic ability. His talents were recently recognized when he was named an All-American, a designation given to only 33 college soccer players in the nation. "He's the first Loyola soccer player to be chosen as an All-American. It's a big deal because the rival coaches vote on the players," says men's soccer coach Brendan Eitz.

Ferguson received the honor because of his speed, scoring, and passing ability, Eitz says.

Last season, Ferguson ranked fifth in the NCAA in goals per game (0.79) and ninth in points per game (1.68). His 15 goals last season ranked third on Loyola's all-time list, while his 32 points tied for fourth. For his efforts, he was named Horizon League Player of the Year.

Ferguson, a junior majoring in theoretical physics and applied mathematics, remains modest about his accomplishments. "I was thrilled, and shocked, to be selected," he says. "But this season, I have one main goal: that we return to the NCAA tournament," in which the men's soccer team competed for the first time ever in 2006, when Ferguson was a freshman.

Eitz lauds Ferguson for his unselfish athleticism. "He's definitely a team player, which makes it nice for a guy who thinks of his team first to earn such accolades." In fact, it was Loyola's team-first attitude which attracted Ferguson to the school. "I could sense it was a positive atmosphere with an up-and-coming team with a lot of energy," Ferguson says.

It also didn't hurt that his father, Kenneth, a law professor at the University of Missouri-Kansas City, grew up in Chicago and was a star quarterback at Lane Tech High School in the early 1970s, or that George Ferguson, who immigrated to Chicago in 1955, continues to live in the city and attends the occasional Loyola soccer match.

"It means a lot to me when my grandfather is there watching," Ferguson says. "He gives me a little advice now and then. But just having him there is an inspiration."

Alyse Serritella (business '10) is one of the top liberos in the Horizon League.

A 'spitfire' on and off the court

IN ITALIAN, libero means "free." In volleyball, a libero is a defensive specialist free to roam the backcourt, making passes, and setting up plays. An athlete playing this position must be aggressive, tenacious, and something of a free spirit. These attributes perfectly describe Alyse Serritella.

Serritella, a junior, is the libero for Loyola's women's volleyball team. She stands at only 5'2", short by modern volleyball standards. But her tough performance on the court makes her a team leader.

Serritella's performance last season included 559 digs, ranking her second on Loyola's all-time single-season chart. She finished second in the Horizon League with 5.22 digs per game. Off the court, Serritella's performance is equally impressive. A junior who is considering switching majors from business to psychology, she has a 3.7 grade-point average, one of the highest of any athlete at Loyola, which qualifies her as a member of the Horizon League Honor Roll.

"When I have a goal—whether it's to be a good volleyball player or a good student—I put my mind to it, get focused, and get down to it," Serritella says.

Being a student-athlete is not easy. There are three to four hours of practice daily, night games, and travel. "You have to learn to manage your time and find time to study," she says.

The intensity Serritella brings to her routine shows on the court. "She's only 5'2", but she has no problem going up to a teammate who's 6'3" and holding her accountable," Coach Marcie Wolbeck says. "She has a very direct leadership style. She's a little spitfire."

Serritella blushes at the description, but agrees. "I do yell at people," she laughs. "But I do it to motivate them, to get them fired up. Some of my teammates probably think I have a big mouth." Whatever her tactics, they appear to be working for her, as Serritella has emerged as arguably the top libero in the Horizon League.

A winning combination

Loyola senior has a mean swing and a great team spirit

WHY WOULD A YOUNG MAN from sunny Tijuana, Mexico, choose Loyola University Chicago, of all places, to play golf?

"I just fell in love with the city, the school, the coach, and the team," Armando Favela, a senior finance major, explains.

Whatever the reasons, men's golf coach Adam Kwiatkoski is grateful. "He's the best golfer Loyola has ever had. He's a legitimate Division I player who could play anywhere," Kwiatkoski says.

Since joining the golf team in 2005, Favela snagged the lowest single-season average in Loyola history (73.6), multiple top ten finishes in tournaments, and All-

Horizon League honors—twice.

Favela spent last summer notching some personal accomplishments. He won the Men's Independent Division of the PGA Minority Collegiate Championship in May with a three-round, one-under-par total. Favela was also one of 314 golfers who qualified to play in the U.S. Amateur Championship in August.

Yet despite all the accolades, Favela remains a team player at Loyola. "He's our team leader. He challenges himself, and he challenges his teammates to be their best," Kwiatkoski says.

Favela enjoys being part of the golf team as much as any personal achievement. "We're really close," he says. "Everybody looks out for each other, whether it's a personal issue, something with school, or helping someone out with their golf swing. We're there for each other."

Favela plans to return home after graduation, spend the summer competing in amateur tournaments, and win a position on the Mexican National Golf Team. He then hopes to begin the process of turning pro and eventually earning a spot on the PGA Tour.

While he will look back fondly on his years at Loyola, one thing he won't miss is the Chicago weather. "That first winter freshman year was tough. I eventually got used to the cold," he says, "but playing golf is a lot more enjoyable in a warm climate." No one will argue that point, but this rising star will certainly be missed.

Armando Favela (finance '09) takes a swing.

Jim Whitesell

Q. What do you see as the key to a successful season in 2008–09?

A. As we integrate a handful of newcomers into our rotation, we have to find the right chemistry. Last season, we struggled shooting the ball, so we need to be better in that area. We are hoping to continue to build on the home-court advantage we've established the last few years and are relying on our students, alumni, and fans to fill the Gentile Center.

Q. What do you think is the strength of this year's team?

A. The amount of experience returning. Several of those players have had significant moments in their careers—J.R. Blount has hit some really big shots to win games for us, and Leon Young was the Freshman of the Year in the Horizon League a few years ago.

Q. What is the biggest challenge facing the team this season?

A. Keeping a team healthy for an entire season is always a challenge. Winning on the road is difficult at any level, and it is especially tough in the Horizon League. We have a lot of guys that will play minutes for us this year, so I think a big challenge for our staff is building that chemistry and mixing the younger players with our veteran cast.

Q. Your team suffered a handful of close losses last season. How do you reverse that trend?

A. I think we need to pay a little more attention to detail. We will spend a lot of time on situational play and awareness in practice. Ultimately, it comes down to making plays, and we need to be better in that department than we were last season. Winning a few close games breeds confidence, and finishing close games gives you a tremendous chance to contend for a championship.

Shannon Reidy

Q. What do you see as the key to having a successful season in 2008–09?

A. Experienced upperclassmen that understand how to win and a deep, talented bench. This year, we have returning experience at key positions. Most feel like we are a year away from a big season, but we have a shot at doing some terrific things this year in conference play.

Q. What do you think is the strength of your team this year?

A. Balanced scoring. Our offense allows each player on the court to be a strong scoring option. We don't have one or two top average scorers of 15, 20 points per game. This doesn't mean that on any given night, a player or two won't step up to put big numbers up for us. It means we rely on quite a few options and need everyone to be confident with the basketball. As these players get used to this system and as they get more experience playing with each other, the decision-making gets smarter and we become a difficult team to shut down. We will also be strong in the post.

Q. What is the biggest challenge facing the team this season?

A. Leadership. We have players with the capacity to be good leaders. We lost 10 games last year by seven points or less. Had those games been played with the majority of junior and senior minutes, we would have probably won most of them. So our biggest questions are, are we more grown-up, and is our bench deep enough to make an impact?

Q. Your team suffered a handful of close losses last season. How do you reverse that trend this year?

A. Strong upperclassmen and better decision-making in the offense. I feel we can put more pressure on defense than over the last few years and run the floor more on offense. As our players get older, more experienced, and deeper with talent, we will be a very good ballclub. I expect to see things begin to change for us this year.

Robert Bucholz, DPhil, history professor, recently elected a fellow of the Royal Historical Society of Great Britain

History prof honored

LOYALA HISTORY PROFESSOR Robert Bucholz was recently elected a Fellow of the Royal Historical Society of Great Britain. The prestigious fellowships are awarded for original contributions to historical scholarship.

Bucholz's primary research interest is the English court and royal household from 1660 into the 19th century. He is the author of several books on the subject. Bucholz is also the project director of the Database of Court Officers, which contains the career facts of every person who served in the British royal household from 1660 to 1837. The database has been consulted by over 2,000 scholars since 2007, including during the official inquiry into the death of Princess Diana. It has also just been added to the permanent online collection of the British Library.

Bucholz is the past president of the Midwest Conference on British Studies, and he was named Prince of Wales Foundation Scholar for Architecture in America in 1997.

The selection was based on input from CAMR members who provided feedback on HR professionals who go above and beyond their daily work to honor the field by their behavior, giving, and impact on others in the field.

Devine to join Law School

Dick Devine, Cook County State's Attorney

LOYALA'S SCHOOL OF LAW welcomes Richard A. Devine (BA '65), Cook County State's Attorney, as a distinguished adjunct professor of law in spring 2009. Upon the completion of his final term as state's attorney, Devine will also join the international law firm Bryan Cave LLP as a partner in the Chicago office, where he will lead its litigation group. "We are delighted that Dick will be joining us at the School of Law," Dean David Yellen says. "Our students will benefit greatly from his knowledge, experience, and wisdom."

"I'm pleased to be returning to my alma mater to teach at the School of Law," Devine says. "Loyola's dedication to excellence in legal education and service to the community made my decision to join the law faculty an easy one." Devine will be teaching criminal law.

Don Wycliff

LOYALA'S NEW SCHOOL OF COMMUNICATION (SOC) has tapped Don Wycliff, long-time editor for the Chicago Tribune and former associate vice president of news and information at the University of Notre Dame, to serve a one-year faculty appointment to teach reporting and editing this fall. "I look forward to being able to focus completely on teaching and on the students," says Wycliff.

Wycliff, who has also taught courses at the University of Notre Dame, Roosevelt University, and Columbia College, is best-known for his work at the Chicago Tribune, where he served as public editor from 2000–2006 and editorial page editor from 1991–2000. His distinguished career also includes work at The New York Times, Chicago Sun-Times, Dallas Times-Herald, and the Chicago Daily News.

Malaria's worst enemy

Bio prof Kim Williamson looks for ways to fight the malaria parasite

Malaria is a disease that most Americans, unless they travel abroad, don't have to think about. But Kim Williamson, PhD, a professor in Loyola's biology department, thinks about it a good deal. Since she started studying the disease 18 years ago, Williamson's malaria research has garnered international attention, and her fascination shows no signs of waning. "I'm more interested in it now than I was when I started," Williamson says. "On a scientific level, the parasite is really, really interesting."

Malaria is a parasitic disease carried by mosquitoes. It is a big problem in the tropics, where mosquitoes live year-round and flourish in the wet climate. Malaria causes just under a million human deaths per year. In infected humans, the malaria parasite develops in the liver and then bursts into the blood stream, where it replicates rapidly. Some humans develop immune responses, but children and those who have not been bitten before are particularly vulnerable. "In a two-day period, the parasite replicates four-to-ten-fold," says Williamson. "In that short time, over 20 percent of your blood cells could be lysed."

Unfortunately, the only symptom is a fever, so for families who live far away from medical care, it's hard to know whether the fever is worth walking a child to the clinic.

The good news is that existing malaria drugs are effective on an individual basis. The bad news is that when drugs are widely used, the malaria parasite develops resistance. "There was a time when Chloroquine was distributed everywhere," Williamson says. "It cost a dime a dose, and there were few side effects. But resistance spread, and in the '90s there was a huge resurgence, especially in Africa. Zanzibar has 'eradicated' malaria three times. It keeps coming back." Now, the most effective drug therapy costs 10 times more than less effective drugs. Per dose, it's one to three dollars, which is a huge amount for many of the people it affects.

Current malaria research, including Williamson's, is geared toward identifying new drugs, and, hopefully, a vaccine.

Specifically, Williamson studies the sexual maturation phase of the malaria parasite, which is required for the parasite to be transmitted to another person. She studies the genes that are involved in the parasite's life cycle that could potentially be drug targets.

There are several reasons Williamson has chosen to devote her life to studying and, ideally, eradicating malaria. "For one thing," she says, "it's interesting how hardy this parasite is. It's evolved with us for millennia, so our relationship is in equilibrium. It's found a discrete niche to fill, which is why it's hard for us to fight it." But more importantly, Williamson wants to help the people affected by malaria. "This disease causes huge amounts of suffering," she says. "It's actually oppressive in these tropical regions, where people and even economies can't develop the way they would otherwise due to the stress of combating malaria. Some economists believe that wiping out tropical diseases could eliminate developmental inequality." Williamson believes that malaria doesn't receive the attention it should precisely because it affects those in less-developed nations. "There are really important issues out there that we need to think about, and we all decide what path we want to pursue," Williamson says.

Learning by experience

AS A UNIVERSITY LOCATED in a major urban center, Loyola offers students a wealth of opportunities, from internships at major companies to service work in local non-profits. In the past, however, it was challenging to connect students with businesses and charities. The new Center for Experiential Learning is working to change that. In only its first year, the center has helped over 1,000 students learn on the job.

"By participating in these kinds of experiences, students get a chance to increase their understanding of their role in an organization, in the community, and as a citizen," says Patrick Green, director of the center.

Through the center, Loyola students contribute to businesses, non-profits, and government agencies in several ways. Some volunteer as part of a service-learning course and discuss their experiences in the classroom. Some take on Federal Work-Study jobs, and others do academic internships. The center also connects undergrads with faculty offering research opportunities.

Amy Jackson, a junior, volunteered at Girls in the Game, a non-profit that uses sports to teach life lessons to underprivileged girls, as part of a service-learning course. "I'd never worked with people from so many different backgrounds, and I found that we had common interests," says Jackson. "The course gave me time to reflect and share the experience with others," Jackson says. "I took something extra away from it."

Tina Dragisic worked as an intern at Children's Memorial Hospital. A senior biology and psychology major, Dragisic helped perform neurology research in a lab. "It was such a great experience," she says. "It proved that this is what I want to do with the rest of my life."

Students aren't the only ones benefiting from the center's work. "We can barely keep up with all the organizations who reach out to us because of the great work that our students have been doing," says Green.

LOYOLA'S PARTNERSHIP

with George B. Swift Specialty School recently received second place in the Jimmy & Rosalynn Carter Partnership Awards for Campus-Community Collaboration, a state-wide award sponsored by Illinois Campus Compact. Loyola education professor Diane Schiller, PhD, has partnered with the Swift School in Edgewater for over 17 years. She now collaborates with the Center for Experiential Learning, and last year she became an Illinois Campus Compact State Farm Faculty Fellow. She has developed a math and fine arts curriculum connecting Loyola students to Swift's Fine and Performing Arts Magnet program.

The Carter Partnership Foundation awards $7,000 for second place, which will be equally split between Loyola and the Swift School for further service-learning and civic engagement opportunities.

Working toward independence with spina bifida

DEVELOPING SELF-RELIANCE is enormously challenging for children with spina bifida, a congenital birth defect associated with paralysis and neuropsychological disabilities. But thanks to a recent grant to Grayson Holmbeck, PhD, professor of clinical psychology and director of clinical training in the psychology department, and Kerry O'Mahar, a graduate student who works with Holmbeck, children with spina bifida could soon be closer to achieving greater independence.

The five-year, $100,000 grant from the Spastic Paralysis Research Foundation—Illinois-Eastern Iowa District of Kiwanis International was awarded by William Piper, foundation chairman and a Loyola alum. The grant will go toward expanding a highly specialized summer camp program, which is designed to help children with spina bifida become more self-sufficient and more confident in their ability to make social connections. "In keeping with Loyola's social justice mission, we want to keep these at-risk kids from becoming disenfranchised or marginalized," says Holmbeck. "We feel there's a lot of hope for them to eventually go on to college and get jobs if they become more independent."

CURL studies shift in homeless population

A woman struggles to get through the day, her right hand paralyzed. Later, she realizes her neck is broken. An emergency surgery is performed, and she is told soon thereafter to get back to work.

A city fleet manager slips on a patch of ice, then loses his job under budget cuts. He finds out that he does not qualify for Social Security disability. His only option, he is told, is to work at Burger King.

These stories represent a growing demographic of people over 50 who have become homeless in Chicago. Christine George, PhD, assistant research professor at Loyola's Center for Urban Research and Learning (CURL), wanted to know why. In the winter of 2006, she and her team joined forces with the Chicago Alliance to End Homelessness. Together, they embarked on a nine-month study to better understand why more and more people between the ages of 50 and 64 are struggling to get by in Chicago.

"We had all these stories," George says. "But we wanted to look systematically at people 50 and over who were homeless to better understand who they were, how the system was successfully and unsuccessfully serving them, and what more needed to be done."

The study confirmed that agencies for the homeless, such as shelters and employment programs, are now serving more people over 50. The surprising thing was that most—75 percent—became homeless for the first time after they turned 40.

As the nation shifts from a more industrialized to a knowledge-based economy, a growing number of people are left in destabilized job situations in middle age, George explains. Many lack adequate financial safety nets to bounce back from illness or injury. Further adding to the problem are issues of ageism, a mismatch between skills and marketplace demands, and assorted individual challenges, ranging from criminal records to chronic health problems.

The CURL study offers a list of potential policy solutions. Among them: creating a state-wide sick-leave program, providing greater outlets for job training, integrating aging and senior homeless services, and working with employers to fight ageism. For those unable to work, the study recommends better early representation for disability claims and expanding current housing programs.

"This is a great example of collaborative research that helps us understand the consequences of shifts in the economy in an aging society, so that we know what's happening below the radar in people's lives," George says. Since its foundation in 1996, CURL has worked with dozens of community and government organizations to research urban conditions and help improve the quality of life in Chicagoland.

Spotlight on research

Stritch and the Graduate School join forces to celebrate research at Loyola

For more than 20 years, Loyola's Graduate School sponsored an annual St. Albert's Day event to highlight graduate student research, while the Stritch School of Medicine sponsored St. Luke's Day to highlight medical student research. This year, for the second time, the St. Albert's Day event was broadened into an overall celebration of research on the Maywood campus.

Medical, nursing, and post-doctoral students; fellows; clinical residents; and faculty members participated in this year's celebration. According to Frederick Wezeman, MD, PhD, associate dean of the Graduate School and chair of the St. Albert's Day committee, the event isn't done growing. "We want to make it a system-wide event," he says.

Attendees had the chance to walk through and view 182 posters and talk with the presenters about their research. Late in the morning, Linda Brubaker, MD, MS, moderated the five-minute oral poster presentation, an event that was added this year. Eleven teams presented, including residents, fellows, and scientists focusing on the more translational types of research. Katherine Knight, PhD, moderated the 15-minute student oral research competition that filled the afternoon. According to Dr. Knight, a microbiologist/immunologist, "This combined research day was an attempt to bring the graduate programs together. It demonstrates how research has become a central part of Stritch's vision, and a lot of this research is going to enhance the institution's clinical activities."

The winner of the 15-minute oral research competition was Kari Severson (microbiology and immunology), for her presentation on "The Appendix As a Site of Immune Development in Response to Select Bacterial Species." Cynthia Von Zee (cell biology, neurobiology, and anatomy) took second place, and Amanda Mickiewicz (pharmacology) took third. Lydia Don Carlos, PhD, professor of cell biology, neurobiology, and anatomy, won the Graduate Faculty Member of the Year Award.

Kathy Albain, MD, director of breast clinical research and thoracic oncology at LUHS

LUHS doc honored for cancer research

KATHY ALBAIN, MD, who has earned an international reputation for her research on breast cancer and lung cancer, has been named one of America's Top Doctors for Women by Women's Health magazine.

The magazine teamed up with the research firm Castle Connolly to create the list of best doctors in 10 specialties. Albain was among 5 doctors in the Midwest and 20 in the country to be named top doctors for cancer care. Albain directs the breast clinical research program within LUHS and is director of Loyola's thoracic oncology program.

Albain has done groundbreaking research on new drug treatments that are customized for individual patients. She was lead author of a pivotal study of a gene test that accurately predicts which patients will benefit from chemotherapy. While Albain is best known for her research, many patients say that what they appreciate most is how hard she works on their behalf.

Celebrating a decade of caring for children

THE PEDIATRIC MOBILE CLINIC of the Ronald McDonald® Children's Hospital of Loyola University Medical Center is a 13-ton, 40-foot children's clinic on wheels that has provided, at no cost, clinical care to uninsured, underinsured, and at-risk children in the Chicago area since 1998. The first of its kind in the Midwest, the clinic offers children from infancy to age 21 a variety of services, including routine check-ups, immunizations, asthma care, and general health education. According to Susan Finn, RN, director, staff see an average of 7,000 children per year—or more than 83,000 since the program's inception.

A LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENTS

Dear Loyolans,

WELCOME TO PARTNER: THE CAMPAIGN FOR THE FUTURE OF LOYOLA. As Loyola alumni, parents, and friends, you are the backbone of our success. The work you do and the people you serve exemplify our promise to prepare people to lead extraordinary lives. We need your support to ensure that tomorrow's students have access to the very best educational experience we can provide, so that they, in turn, can go into the world prepared to make a difference. Just like you.

We need resources to continue our innovative plans in education, research, patient care, and service. With your support, Loyola can strengthen its leadership position within Chicago and throughout the world.

We ask for the partnership of the Loyola community to provide scholarships to deserving students, to attract the finest teachers, and to help us build the best facilities. We invite you to partner with us at this exciting and vital time for Loyola University Chicago.

For more information, visit LUC.edu/partner.

FREQUENTLY ASKED CAMPAIGN QUESTIONS

Q. Why start a campaign now?

A. In the last few years, Loyola has undergone tremendous growth and transformation. We are harnessing that momentum to take Loyola to the next level, continuing our mission of providing access to deserving students and pursuing excellence in education, research, and patient care. This $500 million campaign will provide the programs, scholarships, facilities, and endowment to prepare future leaders who will make a difference in the world.

Q. What about the troubled economy?

A. We announced the "public phase" of our $500M capital campaign, but the "quiet phase" began in December 2004. To date, we have raised well over half of the total goal. The campaign's success will help protect the University from the vagaries of the financial markets and ensure a stable and vibrant future for our students, faculty, and the greater University community.

Q. How will the campaign change Loyola?

A. Good fortune has a way of multiplying itself in unpredictable ways. We expect more of our students to graduate with less debt, more lives to be touched by our medical research and care, and more community outreach. One of our main goals is to boost our overall endowment, which will help in all areas. We're especially intent on increasing our scholarship endowment so that more deserving students from all walks of life can have access to a Loyola education.

Q. How will the money be spent?

A. Two major priorities for us are student scholarships and research, but we have dozens of needs across four campuses, from community health care to athletic facilities.

Q. What is an endowment?

A. An endowment sets aside a specific minimum amount of funding, allowing Loyola to invest the assets and spend only the renewable portion. Endowments represent the financial security that brings freedom and opportunity and are Loyola's way of investing in the future.

Endowed chairs explained

AN ENDOWED CHAIR is a faculty position supported by a permanent fund, which offsets salary and research costs. To hold an endowed chair is the highest honor a faculty member can achieve within the university. An endowed chair is a way to attract and recognize the finest scholars, as well as to fund them, and is a great honor for the university.

Here are the newest endowed chairs for 2008–09:

- A. Kathleen Beazley Chair in ChildLaw
- Cooney & Conway Chair in Advocacy*
- Ignacio Ellacuria, S.J. Chair in Philosophy
- Dr. Frank Kobler Chair in Child Neuropsychology*
- Richard A. McCormick, S.J. Chair in Theology*
- Raymond and Mary Simon Chair in Constitutional Law
- Martin J. Svaglic Chair in Textual Studies

* Indicates that a search is still underway for a scholar to occupy the endowed chair.

“WE BELIEVE DEEPLY in the mission of Loyola, and we believe that together with your help, we can achieve great things. We, like many of you, have our own Loyola story to tell—how Loyola touched us, how it still is such an important part of our lives today, and why we are so invested in making sure this campaign succeeds.”

This year, the Damen Society has over 2400 members—an all-time record!

Giving back through the Damen Society

Arnold Damen, S.J., was the founder and first president of St. Ignatius College, which later became Loyola University Chicago. It is a fitting tribute that Loyolans who contribute personal annual gifts of $1,000 or more to the University he began qualify for membership in the Damen Society.

Jack Hartman (BBA '80, MBA '82, JD '85), a Loyola trustee, has recently taken on the role of chair of the Damen Society. Like Father Damen, Hartman understands the critical need for members of the community to financially support the institutions that serve them. "The participation of alumni and friends is key to continuing the significant progress the University has made in recent years. I'm happy to be a part of that momentum," Hartman says.

Hartman's involvement with Loyola goes far beyond his economic support. In addition to his position on the board of trustees, Hartman has been a member of the Council of Regents, serves on the School of Business Administration Board of Advisors, and is a past president of the School of Law Board of Governors.

"I love Loyola—I chose it three times. It challenged me to become a values-based leader," says Hartman of his ongoing dedication to Loyola's success. "Every place I've been, I've hired people from Loyola. They're hard-working, understand ethics, and are well grounded."

Hartman is president of The Rise Group, an international program management, technical services, and strategy consulting company serving clients with capital improvement projects and major infrastructure programs. Prior to joining Rise, he served as executive director of the Illinois State Toll Highway Authority; executive vice president of construction, engineering, and facilities for the Chicago Transit Authority; and deputy commissioner of Chicago O'Hare International Airport.

He has successfully led large, complex projects including the successful $5.3 billion Illinois Tollway Congestion Relief Plan and the Chicago Transit Authority's (CTA) $2.5 billion Capital Development Program, and managed major terminal and land-side facilities projects at both O'Hare International and Midway Airports.

"The education I received at Loyola, with its focus on excellence and ethics, helped start me on my career, so I'm glad to help lead this significant group of donors," Hartman says. "Jack's been an outstanding leader in the Chicago and Illinois business community, as well as a loyal alum who generously contributes to the success of the University," says Jonathan Heintzelman, vice president for advancement. "We're delighted to have him bring his considerable leadership skills to this role."

Founders' Dinner benefits students

WHILE 14 OF LOYOLA'S most committed and accomplished alumni and friends were honored at the eighth annual Founders' Dinner in early June, student scholarship also received a substantial increase. The $150,000 ticket proceeds from the 950 guests attending—a record number—went toward the Presidential Scholarship Fund.

"We gathered to pay tribute to an exceptional group of Loyolans," says President Michael J. Garanzini, S.J. "Each one of our honorees embodies our mission as a Jesuit, Catholic institution of higher learning and we are extremely proud of them. That we also were able to raise so much toward student scholarship made a wonderful evening that much more so."

Robert L. Parkinson Jr. (BBA '73, MBA '75) meets with the first cohort of Baxter Scholars in spring 2008.

Alum's generosity supports Health Care MBA

Tackling the challenges facing the U.S. health-care industry requires leaders who are not only knowledgeable, but also have the ethical foundation needed to make tough funding and policy decisions.

Thanks to a generous gift from Bob Parkinson, chairman and CEO of Baxter International Inc., Loyola's new Master of Business Administration in Health Care Management is designed to address that need. Parkinson formerly served as dean of Loyola's School of Business Administration and Graduate School of Business and had a distinguished 25-year career at Abbott Laboratories, serving as its president and chief operating officer before taking the helm at Baxter four years ago.

"Loyola is the only university in Chicago with a business school, law school, medical school, and nursing school," says Parkinson, "all of which are critical dimensions in an industry as diverse as health care." The program also taps into Loyola's Jesuit, Catholic tradition to address the ethical and moral issues that surround health care and operates as a cohort, with students attending all of the required courses together, in order to create a sense of community and to enrich discussion.

"This program has provided me with direction and extraordinary learning opportunities."

"The first year of the program has been exciting for me," says Julie Garrett, manager of the Medical Intensive Care Unit at Northwestern Memorial Hospital. "The diversity of the cohort, with students representing many different fields of health care, is a great opportunity for networking."

For fellow student Syed Zaffer, an intern for the Health and Medicine Policy Research Group, Loyola's graduate program has helped clarify his career direction. "When I graduated from college, I was at a crossroads," says Zaffer. "This program has provided me with direction and extraordinary learning opportunities, both in the classroom and throughout the city."

After meeting several of the students in the program, Parkinson was impressed. "Loyola's program will produce students who are not only technically knowledgeable about the diverse dimensions of health care," he says, "but who will help to change the health-care system in the right way, by remaining sensitive to their social responsibilities."

Niehoff partners with VA to ease nursing shortage

THE DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS

Affairs (VA) has awarded a $3 million grant to the Marcella Niehoff School of Nursing as part of a five-year pilot program creating a VA Nursing Academy through partnerships with nursing schools. Niehoff will use the funds to expand faculty and the student body to address the nursing shortage in the United States. It will fund the creation of a mental health center to better integrate mental health concepts into nursing care. The grant also will enhance the Edward Hines VA recruitment/retention program of new baccalaureate graduates by implementing a nursing residency program, expanding the VA Learning Opportunities Residency Program for nurses, and using local and VA funding to meet the educational debt reduction and/or continuing education needs of graduates. Niehoff is one of 10 accredited nursing schools nationwide selected from among 42 applicants to participate in the partnership with the VA.

HOT TOWN, STUDY IN THE CITY.

PRE-COLLEGIATE SUMMER SCHOLARS | THREE- AND SIX-WEEK PROGRAMS

High school juniors and seniors are invited to earn college credit while experiencing life at Loyola. With three great offerings, two in Chicago and one at the Rome campus, your scholar will have a summer to write home about.

For more information, visit LUC.edu/summerscholars.

Preparing people to lead extraordinary lives

Family Weekend

NEARLY 1,300 alumni, parents, students and friends attended Loyola's first-ever Family Weekend in September.

"Family Weekend is a wonderful celebration for the entire Loyola community, as we're able to bring families and alums together to celebrate their mutual connection to Loyola," said Jane Neufeld, Loyola's dean of students. "There was such a great spirit among the attendees all weekend, and watching them interact with our faculty and staff volunteers really shows what a tight-knit University community we have. It is a pleasure to witness firsthand."

Guests attended more than 30 events ranging from athletic matches and drama productions to a reception with the president and provost. We were sure to snap a legacy photo of alumni and current students and 700 people came to the BBQ and carnival.

Preparations and planning have already begun for next year's festivities. Mark your calendar for September 25-27, 2009, as this is truly a celebration you don't want to miss!

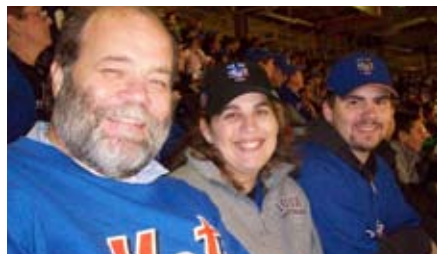

Loyola Alumni Clubs are now Loyola Rambler Clubs! Anyone who loves the Ramblers is welcome to attend our events. By changing the name, we hope to reflect that all members of the Loyola family are invited to join in the fun.

SANTA FE / ALBUQUERQUE

Eight alumni and friends enjoyed a tour of the country's oldest capital city. The fun and informative tour concluded with lunch at the renowned Shed Restaurant. Next up is the National Day of Service in Albuquerque.

MILWAUKEE

The group is looking forward to the Loyola vs. UW Milwaukee men's basketball game on January 28 (with dinner beforehand at Trinity Irish Pub) and participating in the Alumni National Day of Service in April.

LOS ANGELES

Ramblers from the greater LA area gathered for a Chicago tradition: Second City. After meeting for drinks, the group watched the famous comedy group perform their show, "Edmund Serves Coffee." This winter, the group is planning a Bulls vs. Clippers game.

NEW YORK

The Cubs had already clinched the National League pennant (how long ago that seems!), but that didn't stop 50 members of the Loyola family from heading out to Shea Stadium as the Cubs took on the Mets. Look for details soon on a spring event.

PHOENIX

On Saturday, December 6, come celebrate the holidays with fellow Ramblers at the Phoenix Zoo with dinner and Zoolights. Be on the lookout for details pertaining to a Cubs Spring Training Game.

SAN FRANCISCO

This fall the San Francisco Bay area Rambler Club enjoyed an A's vs. White Sox game and a Day at the Races. The group is planning its spring and summer events so stay tuned!

DENVER

To kickoff our newest club, come watch the Colorado Avalanche take on the Chicago Blackhawks on Thursday, Jan. 8 at the Pepsi Center. Look for details in the mail and online at LUC.edu/alumni/clubs.

NATIONAL DAY OF SERVICE • APRIL 18, 2009

After the success of Loyola's first-ever National Day of Service, we are planning ahead for 2009. Mark your calendar now for Saturday, April 18, 2009. Plan to join us as Loyola alumni reach out to area organizations working to build a stronger community and support people in need. Here are the Chicagoland sites where Loyola alumni and their families will be sharing their time:

- Greater Chicago Food Depository
- Poder Learning Center / National Museum of Mexican Art
- Chicago Jesuit Academy
- Brown Elephant Resale Shop
- Forest Preserve District of Cook County
- Howard Area Community Center

Clubs in LA, Omaha, Phoenix, St. Louis, and Santa Fe participated in 2008; we look forward to including more cities in 2009. Please contact Allison Cote (acote@luc.edu) or Clara Dina Hinojosa (chinoj1@luc.edu) to recommend a site in your city and for information about how to get involved in your area.

PRESIDENT'S

Preparing people to lead extraordinary lives

From the President

DEAR LOYOLANS,

It is my pleasure to provide you with the Loyola University Chicago President's Report for the year ending June 30, 2008. This fall, our undergraduate enrollment reached a record total of 15,670, which includes 2,176 freshmen and 615 transfer students. This year, over 4,000 of our students live on campus in University residence halls. Loyola is now the largest Jesuit, Catholic university in the nation, and, having reached enrollment capacity, the focus now is on maintaining our enrollments while improving the academic credentials of our student body. This past year we enrolled four Fulbright Scholars, as well as a record number of students applying for research stipends or participating in research programs. More than 700 students are enrolled in our new School of Communication, which will open its doors on the Water Tower Campus in January. In August we also welcomed 50 new full-time faculty members, including five who will hold newly endowed chairs.

While our finances and enrollment levels are strong, there are always new opportunities and challenges ahead. One significant challenge, particularly during this current national economic crisis, is to keep tuition affordable and our programs accessible. This year, the University awarded scholarships and grants totaling $101 million, as compared with $92 million last year. Approximately 95 percent of this financial aid was funded internally by the University. Of the $101 million awarded in fiscal year 2008, 82 percent was awarded to full-time undergraduate students for whom institutional resources are the principal source of financial aid. Our need for externally funded scholarships and grants is growing at a time when federal and state support remains constant. The best way to ensure our ability to provide all students with an affordable education is to grow our endowment resources with the help of philanthropic support.

The continued support provided by our loyal alumni and friends, and by corporations and foundations, has allowed Loyola to remain on the path toward physical and academic revitalization. I am delighted to inform you that total contributions for fiscal year 2008 for Loyola University Chicago and Loyola Medicine were an all-time high of $44.3 million—a $7 million increase over last year—with 10,919 alumni participating and a total of 15,380 donors overall. We are proud of the growth of our Damen Society membership with 2,412 individuals making gifts to the University of $1,000 or more—a 15 percent increase over last year and another all-time high.

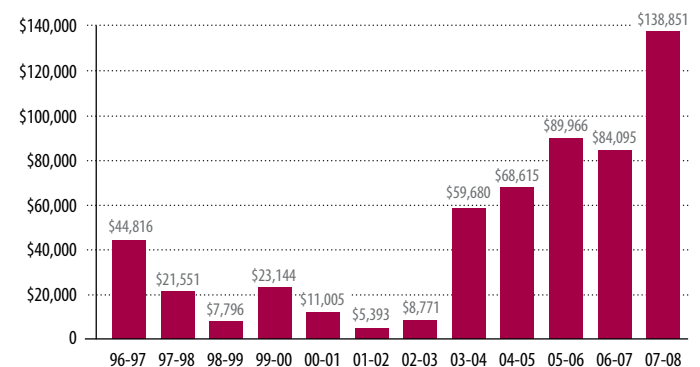

On September 20 the University announced its most ambitious undertaking ever—Partner: The Campaign for the Future of Loyola. The campaign's goal is $500 million, and we have already raised more than $278 million for the University and Health System. When completed, the campaign will provide scholarship support, faculty programming, research monies, and new and improved facilities. We are off to a great start and very much appreciate our many partners who have chosen to invest in the future of Loyola.

Loyola's Vital Signs

OPERATIONS ($000)

EXPENDITURES ($000)

During the past fiscal year, the University generated an operating surplus of $37.7 million. As in years past, we have reinvested this surplus by creating or augmenting endowments and capital improvements. The University opened the new state-of-the-art Richard J. Klarchek Information Commons on the Lake Shore Campus in January. After investing $139 million in capital assets in fiscal year 2008, the University continues to plan for future capital projects to meet the needs of our students as well as our faculty and staff.

As you know, the investment market was quite unstable in the past year, and the University recorded a loss of 5 percent of its endowment value. This decline was largely offset by gifts, which maintained the value of the endowment fund approximately even with the prior year. We have confidence in our investment strategies and continue to look toward long-term growth. The market decline substantially offset our strong operational performance and resulted in a $4.4 million, or .6 percent, increase in net assets.

The University's strong and stable financial condition again earned a credit rating upgrade. In fiscal year 2008, Standard & Poor's recognized the financial strength of Loyola with a credit rating upgrade to an A from an A- because of the University's strong financial performance over the last several years. This follows a similar upgrade from Moody's Investors Service in the prior year.

While this report focuses on our last fiscal year, the current economic crisis is serious and demands a vigilant eye and fiscal restraint. The challenges of heavy debt and credit tightening affect our entire community, and we are cognizant of the fact that the biggest impact from our national economic woes is on our students and their families. Thanks to conservative budgeting, strong contingency planning, and proactive controls, Loyola's financial condition remains stable and healthy. That said, the current financial setbacks are serious, and we will constantly assess our financial standing and will plan cautiously to meet the needs of our students and our entire community. While we do not expect a significant impact to our current budget, we will create various contingency budgets for fiscal year 2010, including no-growth and reduced-spending options, as well as a range of small tuition increases.

I hope you find this report informative. The continued fiscal health of the University is fortified by the generous assistance received from our many supporters—faithful alumni, faculty, staff, students, parents, and friends of Loyola, including our corporate and foundation partners. We greatly appreciate your partnership in our efforts to educate men and women to lead extraordinary lives. We look forward to seeing you at events throughout the year and wish you and your family a blessed Thanksgiving and Christmas season.

Sincerely,

Michael J. Garanzini, S.J. President

TUITION-FINANCED AID ($000)

ENDOWMENT VALUE AND RETURNS ($000)

Founders' Circle

Ignatius Loyola, Francis Xavier and Peter Faber were college friends whose vision, mission and prayer were the compass that guided the Society of Jesus and shaped the proud tradition of Jesuit education and service. The Founders' Circle is Loyola University Chicago's most prestigious giving society and recognizes those who have helped to carry on the work of these Jesuit founders by investing in our University and Health System.

Our Founders' Circle honors the men and women who have made philanthropic gifts totaling more than $100,000 to Loyola University Chicago and Loyola Health System.

Through generous financial support and lifelong commitments to the individuals we serve, our Founders' Circle has shaped lives and mapped a course for the tremendous future of Loyola.

We extend our sincere gratitude to our Founders' Circle members listed below (based on gifts received by September 1, 2008).

Ignatius Loyola was born in 1491 in Northern Spain. As the first General of the Society of Jesus, he composed thousands of letters to those following in his mission of educating youth, ministering to the sick and serving the greatest needs of society. By 1773, his legacy created more than 700 schools and 175 seminaries throughout the world. Today, millions of people from all corners of the globe are educated and served annually in the Jesuit traditions that he established. Loyola referred to himself as a pilgrim, and he will forever be known for pioneering the vision for the Society of Jesus.

Francis Xavier, born in Spain in 1506, is considered the greatest missionary since the time of the Apostles. In just 10 years after joining Ignatius Loyola in creating the Society of Jesus, Xavier traveled to Italy, France, Spain, Portugal, India, Japan, and the Philippines to establish educational institutions rooted in the Jesuit mission. He embodied the youthful spirit and idealism of the Jesuit order.

Susana Cavallo, PhD, associate director of the John Felice Rome Center and professor of Spanish, is faculty donor who supports Loyola because she is deeply committed to Jesuit education.

"Loyola is my second home—the site of my entire adult career. Loyola gives me the opportunity to assist in the formation of young people and to flourish as a scholar. Giving to Loyola is an extension of my family's lives. My children, Alex and Allegra Vassilopoulos, their father, and all the men in my family attended Loyola Academy. Many of us also have taken courses at Loyola University Chicago. I'm the most recent one—an avid student in the music program at LUC and in the Italian program at the Rome Center."

WHY MUNDELEIN?

"My mother was a Mundelein alumna—she graduated in 1942 with a chemistry degree. Also, I liked the idea of going to an all female school, and at that time it was more progressive than Loyola. I grew up on the Southwest Side, in Mount Greenwood, which was very suburban. Rogers Park was so different. I loved being close to the lake."

EXTRACURRICULARS IN INTERESTING TIMES

"We were in school from '68 to '72, so we entered with all manner of mayhem happening. We were all involved in anti-war activities, and I wound up on the coordinating committee as a student representative of a Vietnam War moratorium. Later, we had a youth vote conference at Loyola, and Jesse Jackson was there."

SETTING UP SHOP

"In 1976, I opened up the Heartland Café with my partner, Michael James. The impetus for us to start the Heartland was that real food was not available to any degree. Your options at that time were really limited to hamburgers. We wanted to offer things like vegetables and whole grains. We wanted to set an economy in motion that would allow for employees to have a more positive work experience. We invited people to bring their gifts and skills with them to work. We wanted to be a resource for the community. We tried to build the world that we should have."

A CHANGING NEIGHBORHOOD

"Rogers Park has gotten even more diverse since I arrived in '68. When I got here, the old Jewish and Catholic strongholds were already disassembling. It has gone through a variety of incarnations. Now, it's very exciting. After years of people knowing each other, there is a core of true Rogers Parkers who are in love with the neighborhood."

BACK TO SCHOOL

"I taught college students for many years without any advanced degrees. The connections I had and the activism I was involved with helped me to be a useful staff member in urban studies. For a time, I left the Heartland to run Harold Washington's district for re-election, and when Washington died they called me back to teach. Finally, Loyola offered me a fellowship in Chicago Studies."

TOWN-GOWN RELATIONS

"I think the local community has gotten a lot closer with Loyola because the school has gotten a lot better about being a neighbor. Up until the turn of the century, they had a habit of warning students away from the neighborhood. This has changed. Some teachers bring their students to the Heartland now. Our relationship is better than it has ever been before."

Eyes on the skies

ALTHOUGH THE PLANNED TELESCOPE was never installed in Cudahy Science Hall, there was at one time a telescope on what is now part of Loyola's campus. In 1941, a telescope with a five-inch lens was installed in a specially designed observatory on the 8th-floor roof of Mundelein College's Skyscraper building making it one of the tallest in the country at the time.

TRIVIA QUESTION:

In 1953, Mundelein College opened the Phoenix Room in the Skyscraper building. What was the purpose of this room? To find the answer to this question and to learn more about the history of Mundelein College, visit the new interactive timeline at LUC.edu/wla/timeline.
